Baby left with mother despite positive test for drug use

BY RANDY ELLIS

SEMINOLE — In a report on a Seminole baby's death, an oversight agency last week found DHS workers left the girl with her mother even though both had illegal drugs in their systems when the child was born.

Tamberlynn Wheeler died three months after her birth in December 2007, showing major signs of malnourishment.

Her parents this year were charged with child neglect following an investigation made more complicated by the state Office of Chief Medical Examiner's inability to determine cause of death.

"I think a lot of citizens think that when a new mother tests positive for drugs, her baby is picked up and not returned until the mother is better," said Lisa Smith, director of the Oklahoma Commission on

Report probes complaints made prior to baby's death

By Tim Hudson
E-E County Reporter

A report released Tuesday shows that Department of Human Services workers investigated the mother of a 10-day-old infant found dead in a washing machine six times before the baby's death on Nov. 4.

Among the complaints was a report that a relative had died in the home from a drug overdose and that other relatives failed to report the death for seven hours because they were "shooting up speed" when the relative died.

The report, issued by the Oklahoma Commission on Children and Youth Office of Juvenile System Oversight on the death of 10-day-old Maggie Trammel, indicates there had been several reports regarding the care of Trammel and two other children, ages 5 and 8, in the home. The reports dated as far back as March 2009.

Trammel's mother, 26-year-old Lyndsey Dawn Fiddler, is currently being held on $100,000 bond on charges of child neglect.

Fiddler's case has garnered national attention since the baby's death was reported.

According to the OCCY report, the first complaint, which was made on March 27, 2009, stated that Fiddler's children were reported to have been absent from day care. Fiddler stated the children had been sick.

"The reporter stated that Lyndsey Fiddler and the children lived with a relative until about two or three weeks earlier when they were thrown out. The reporter was concerned about the children's safety," the report states.

DHS reportedly accepted the report and screened it out on April 4 as "Not Child Abuse/Neglect," and documented that "no information was given that stated the children's welfare was at substantial risk of serious neglect or physical danger."

The second report, on Oct. 12, 2009, said that Fiddler and two other adults living in the home "all used drugs in front of the children" and that "the adults passed out from drug use" and that "one of the adults was so high that they fell asleep in their food."

The report stated that a
